Parliament assembled for the dispatch of business on the 4th February, when the following Speech was delivered, which appears to have given general satisfaction.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded by his Majesty to inform you, that since he last met you in Parliament, his Majesty's efforts have been unremittingly exerted to preserve the peace of Europe.

"Faithful to the principles which his Majesty has promulgated to the world as constituting the rule of his conduct, his Majesty declined being party to any proceedings at Verona which could be deemed an interference in the internal concerns of Spain on the part of Foreign Powers. And his Majesty has since used, and continues to use, his most anxious endeavours and good offices to allay the irritation unhappily subsisting between the French and Spanish Governments; and to avert, if possible, the calamity of war between France and Spain.

"In the East of Europe his Majesty flatters himself that peace will be preserved, and his Majesty continues to receive from his Allies, and generally from other Powers, assurances of their unaltered disposition to cultivate with his Majesty those friendly relations which it is equally his Majesty's object on his part to maintain.

"We are further commanded to apprise you, that discussions having long been pending with the Court of M[illegible] respecting depredations committed on th[illegible]mmerce of his Majesty's subjects in the We[illegible]st Indian Seas, and other grievances of which his Majesty had been under the necessity of complaining, those discussions have termin[illegible]ed in an admission by the Spanish Governm[illegible]nt of the justice of his Majesty's complaint[illegible], and in an engagement for satisfactory repar[illegible]ion.

"We are commanded to assure you, that his Majesty has not been unmindful of the Addresses presented to him by the two Houses of Parliament, with respect to the foreign slave-trade.

"Propositions for the more effectual suppression of that evil were brought forward by his Majesty's Plenipotentiary in the conferences at Verona, and there have been added to the treaties upon this subject, already concluded between his Majesty and the Governments of Spain and the Netherlands, articles which will extend the operation of those treaties, and greatly facilitate their execution.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"His Majesty has directed the estimates of the current year to be laid before you. They have been framed with every attention to economy; and the total expenditure will be found to be materially below that of last year.

"This diminution of charge, combined with the progressive improvement of the revenue, has produced a surplus exceeding his Majosty's expectation. His Majesty trusts, therefore, that you will be able, after providing for the services of the year, and without affecting public credit, to make a farther considerable reduction in the burdens of his people.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"His Majesty has commanded us to state to you, that the manifestation of loyalty and attachment to his Person and Government, which his Majesty received in his late visit to Scotland, has made the deepest impression upon his heart.

"The provision which you made in the last session of Parliament for the relief of the distresses in considerable districts in Ireland, has been productive of the happiest effects; and his Majesty recommends to your consideration such measures of internal regulations as may be calculated to promote and secure the tranquillity of that country, and to improve the habits and condition of the people.

"Deeply as his Majesty regrets the continued depression of the agricultural interest, the satisfaction with which his Majesty contemplates the increasing activity which pervades the manufacturing districts, and the flourishing condition of our commerce in most of its principal branches, is greatly enhanced by the confident persuasion that the progressive prosperity of so many of the interests of the country cannot fail to contribute to the gradual improvement of that great interest which is the most important of them all.,'
